CO-WORKERS

Judy Beard discusses how working alongside men has changed over the years.

When I first got hired it was somewhat negative, because it wasn't as many women in the postal service at the time. I was making $2.49 an hour, when I was first hired, and it was negative. Until more and more women got into the postal service, and changed you know that feeling. And they saw themselves as moving into the maintenance or moving into the electronic technician field. But because postal employees get the same pay, the equal pay, eventually they accepted it.
