

JOYCE OLVERA

CO-WORKERS

When I went to, um, Daytona in 1976, um, I was-made sure that-the supervisor made sure that I was part of the unloading the trucks and, uh, taking care of all the basic things, just like any other person would do. So, there was, uh, there was the transferring over at that time: they were still looking at women like they were not quite, uh, what they should be. So it was-um-it was very good experience and, um, I didn't mind. It was-I didn't have long fingernails after a while in there. But, heh, it was okay. It was very good and, uh, some very good people to work with. Two guys and I went in on the same day and-and that was what we did. We stayed the "three musketeers" the whole time. Working together, as all men. So, it was good.